[From the National Intelligencer.] HEWARKS OF MIT. WEBSTER, THE BILL TO POSTPORE THE PARKET OF THE FOURTH INSTALMENT OF THE DE-POSITE TO: THE STATES.

THURSDAY, September 13, 1837

Mr. WEBSTER rose, and said that the impertance of the present crisis, and the urgency of this occasion were such as to lead him earnthem, (said Mr. W.) I would be glad to accept I repeat, sir, that it is the duty of some Gov-any measure of substantial relief which they enument or other to supervise the currency the Treusury, in his report to the same body, longs to any of the State Governments, for exonly regard one object, and are in their tenden- ample; to provide for or regulate the currency cy, only directed to one branch of partial relief between New Orleans and New York? The evils, however under which the community now suffers, (said Mr. W.) though related, and of the same family, are yet capable of distinct consideration. In the first place, there are the waitin of the Treasury, arising from the stoppings of payments and the falling off of the entitity, with some lew and trifling exceptions Hence has proceeded a prostration of the local correct, and a serious obstruction and difficulty thrown in the way of buying and selling. A third want in the want of an accredited paper medium, equal to specie, having equal credit over all parts of the country, capable of serving for the payment of debts and carrying on the internal business of the country, throughout and the benefit through all the operations of exbetween The different and distinct sections of change. No doubt some modes of establishing large sums on deposit in some of the States, and this great union. These three evils, though they are co-existent and cognate in their being, cannot be thy the same mensures of relief; if relief is given to the one, it does not follow that you will relieve the others; if you replenich the Treasury, and thus bring a remedy to that evil, this brings no relief to the disordered currency. And again, if the local currency is relieved, it does not supply the other want, wantely, that of a universally accredited medi-

It has, no doubt, struck the country generalexclusively regarde the intent af the govern. outpourings of the Secretary which are very considerable in quantity are under seven heads, that which is the essential element of all the the exact number of the seven vials of which we read; but the contents of none of these are concocted or prepared in reference to the benefit of the community; all the medicine is intended for the government treasury, and there is none for the sickness and disease of society, except collaterally, remotely, and by the dy. It is, however, to the credit of the President that he has given, in an unequiyocal ligible manner, his reasons for not recommend. ing a plan for the reliet of the country, and they are that, according to his view, it is not with. in the constitutional province of government.
I confess (said Mr. W.) this declaration is to me quite astounding, and I cannot but think that, when it comes to be considered, it will produce a shock upon the whole country. This avowed disregard of the public distress, upon the ground of alleged want of power; this exclusive concern for the interest of government and revenue; this broad line of distinction. now, for the first time, drawn between the new eta in our politica. For one, (said Mr. W) I consider the government as but a mere agency; it acts not for itself, but for the country; the whole end and design of its being is to pronote the general interests of the community. Peculiar interests, selfish interests, exclusive regard for itself, are wholly incompatible with the Objects of its institution, and convert it from its the character as an agency for the people, into Holding different opinions on this subject, and being prepared to stand by and maintain them, Lam certainly rejoined at the clear shape which the question has at last assumed: Now, he that runs may read; there are none but can see what the question in: is there any duty imcumbent ou this government to superintend the school currency of the country? has it any thing to do beyond the regulation of the gold and silver coin? In that state of mixed currency which existed when the constitution was formed, and Ahich has existed ever since, is it or is it not a part of the duty of the government to exercise # Bup winery can and concern over that which senstitube by far the greater part of that curren-

a separate dominant power, with purposes and

Objects exclusively its own.

In other words, may this government abandon to the state- and to the local banks, without control or supervision, the unrestrained issue of paper for circulation, without any attempt on its own part to es'ablish a paper medium which shell he equivalent to specie, and universally ac-"edited all over the country. Or, Mr. President, to put the question in still other words, since this government has the regulation of trade, not only but con the United Brates and foreign States, but between the several States. then which is the most important and essential agent or instrument of trade, the actual circulating medianic Now, Mr. President, on these questions, as already anid, i entertain sentiments wholly different from thous which the mesuage

[Cie, (sold lift: vv)in my view, an imperative duly is fugue this government by the con-Attution, to excluse a supervisory care over all that is in the state of the country is placed in the hands of the rederal Government; no elate, by its we'mp I'm god value to a brav-farthing. If the government will do its duty on the great subject of the currency, the mercantile and industrious classes will feel such a currency may be more favorable to exchange than others; but by whatever mode established, such a currency must be useful to a grent extent. The question, therefore, comes to this, whether we are to have such a medium. I understand there are gentlemen who are op posed to all paper money, who would have no medium whatever in circulation but gold and silver ; now this, at all events, is an intelligible proposition: but as to those who say that there may be a paper inedium, and yet that there shall be no such medium universally receivable, and ly, that the most important objection to the of general credit, however honest the purposes message is, that it says nothing about relief to of such gentlemen may be, I cannot perceive the country, directly and mainly; the whole a- the sanity of such views; I cannot comprehend mount of the proposition it contains relates to the utility of their intentions; I can have no the government itself, the interest of the com- faith, sir, in any such systems. I agree that but it is equally true and abundantly manifest, this is a necessary object, but the question is whether this bill is the proper mode of making ence to currency questions. It is a general interests of the government and the interests such a provision. ank, in it worth while to do this? I think not, We are to consider that this money, according to the provisions of the existing law, is to go equally among all the States, and among all the people; and the wants of the treasury must be supplied, if supplies are necessary, equally by all the people. It is not a question, there fore, whether some shall have money, and others shall make good the deliciency? All parto the supply. The House resumed the onunderation of the resolution of Mr Wise, for the appointment of a select committee by buttot, to investigate the enuses of the fatture, delays, and expenditures of the Florida War.

... Mr Bell spoke in support of the resolution, and in opposition to the proposition to refer the inquiry to a standing committee. He contend ed that the investigation was demanded by the country, and not by party, and that it was due to the Speakers who was obliged to appoint committees on party grounds, to relieve him from so delicate and difficult a duty, and throwthe responsibility of the selection in the House. All were in favor of the investigation, and the only difficulty was in the mode of effecting it.

Mr Wise made some explanation with a view to correct a statement of the morning papers with regard to his remarks of yesterday. He did not say that Gen. Campbell "locked the door of the committee coon and put the key in his pocket," &c. but that he looked towards the door and threatened to kick it, &c That threat added Mr. W. had the same effect upon that committee as the deed would have had.

Mr Gholson, of Miss said he had heard some whispers of this committee room scene, and had hoped it would prove untine. He thanked the gentleman for having disclosed the affair, and he felt confident that it would lead the house to the conclusion that it was useless and improper to appoint any more select committees of investi gation. If three men, by their mensures, could dictale a report to six, then no confidence was to be placed in the report of a committee. He was for conding the inquiry, which no one here was opposed to, to the standing committee on military affairs.
